T police seek alleged assailant

MBTA Transit Police recently released surveillance images of a man they believe indecently assaulted a woman on an outbound Red Line train last Sunday.

The man, described as Hispanic and in his mid-20s, allegedly assaulted the victim as the train pulled in to JFK/UMass T Station around 8:30 a.m. Anyone with information is urged to contact Transit Police. METRO

Fugitive

Suspect in '09 Dot slayings returns to Boston

A man who fled to Trinidad just days after he allegedly gunned down three people in Dorchester in 2009 was brought back to Boston and is scheduled to be in court today to answer to the murder charges.

Keron Pierre, 27, formerly of Mattapan, will be arraigned today, according to the Suffolk district attorney's office.

In 2010, he was indicted by a grand jury for the fatal shootings after what authorities said was a heated exchange in 2009 outside of a party. METRO

Pro-topless protesters bare it all for equality

Topless support. Demonstrators in Boston turned some heads to fight a "taboob" practice.

In honor of Go Topless Day 2013, five Massachusetts residents took to the streets of Boston yesterday to call for womens' right to go topless in public.

"It's to crush the social stigma, and crush the political and legal stigma," said Stacey Schnee, 28, Worcester, who organized the march to coincide with similar GoTopless.org demonstrations held yesterday in 35 states.

"The wind blowing across your chest and your body feels amazing. I feel like it's 10 degrees cooler than it actually is. Women should absolutely be able to enjoy that," she said.

When confronted with criticism over baring her breasts in public, Cally, 22, said her response is to ask, "What is offensive about my body, and why is my body intrinsically more offensive than a man's body?"

Cally, who declined to give her last name, and Schnee were the only two females to bare their breasts at yesterday's march. They were, however, backed up by three bare-chested men.

Holding signs and handing out flyers, the group made its way around Boston Common before marching past the State House and to City Hall Plaza.

With Duck and trolley tours in full force, the shocking demonstration drew plenty of reaction. Some passersby voiced support, while others laughed and heckled the group.

"It doesn't matter what you do," said Schnee, who plans to organize a bigger event next year. "You could walk down the street wearing a purple hat. Some people would love you, some people would be offended. What's the difference?"

Overheard

Some of the reactions yesterday from pedestrians and motorists included:

- "Y'all need Jesus" – WOMAN ON BEACON HILL
- "I appreciate your balls, and your tits." – MAN IN CITY HALL PLAZA.

Revere man faces murder charge for stabbing

T tracked. The alleged murderer was found covered in blood at a Blue Line station.

A 46-year-old Revere man found covered in blood at an MBTA station was arrested and charged with the murder of another man found dead in a trailer park.

Peter Deconinck was charged with murder and will face arraignment today at Chelsea District Court, according to the Suffolk district attorney's office.

Deconinck allegedly stabbed to death Ronald Russo, 50, of Winthrop, inside a trailer park on Revere Beach Parkway Saturday night after an altercation. Authorities did not say specifically what was the subject of the fight.

Authorities said the arrest was made based on evidence recovered at the scene, witness interviews and Deconinck's own statements.

A person called 911 at about 8:30 p.m. to report the body at the Revere Beach Parkway trailer park, according to the Suffolk district attorney's office.

Neighbors described a horrific scene at the park.

"The whole place was covered," James Harriman told WHDH Saturday night. He told the station that he found the body inside a trailer. "Literally looked like helter-skelter. Tables upside down. Chairs upside down."

Shortly after police responded to the body, officers were called to the Beachmont T station where they found Deconinck with blood on his clothing and a cut on his hand. He was detained by police.

Syria lets UN inspect attack site, but US says too late

Red line. Obama has warned that the use of chemical weapons would have serious consequences.

Syria agreed to let the United Nations inspect the site of a suspected chemical weapons attack, but a U.S. official said that any such offer would be "too late to be credible."

Foreign powers have been searching for a response since many hundreds of people were killed by poisonous gas on Wednesday in the suburbs of Damascus in what appears to have been the world's worst chemical weapons attack in 25 years.

The United Nations said Damascus had agreed to a cease-fire while a U.N. team of experts are at the site for inspections, which will begin today. Syria confirmed it had agreed to allow the inspections.

But there were increasing signs that the United States and its allies were considering taking action, a year after President Barack Obama said the use of chemical weapons was a "red line" that would prompt serious consequences.

A senior U.S. official said there was very little doubt that the Syrian government had used a chemical weapon against civilians on Wednesday and that Washington was still weighing how to respond.

"At this juncture, any belated decision by the regime to grant access to the U.N. team would be considered too late to be credible, including because the evidence available has been significantly corrupted as a result of the regime's persistent shelling and other international actions over the last five days," the official told Reuters yesterday.

Russia says 'tragic mistake' to assign blame too soon

Russia said that assigning blame too soon over the alleged chemical weapons attack in Syria would be a "tragic mistake," before a U.N. investigation today.

Without directly naming the United States, but in comments that warned against any military action against Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's government, Moscow urged against "hurried conclusions" over the reports of a poison gas attack. "We strongly urge those who, in trying to impose their opinion on U.N. experts ahead of the results of an investigation, announce the possibility of military action against Syria, to exercise discretion and not make tragic mistakes," the Russian Foreign Ministry said in a statement.

US response to Syria must be international action

Any U.S. response to the alleged use of chemical weapons in Syria must be part of an international action, a senior U.S. Democratic senator, Jack Reed, said yesterday.

"It has to have support internationally, not just politically, but militarily," he said on CBS' "Face the Nation," adding that Washington could not get into a "general military operation in Syria."

Yosemite. Dangerous wildfire grows, fueling unpredictable winds

A colossal wildfire raging on the edge of Yosemite National Park has produced dangerous weather patterns by fueling thunderous pyrocumulus clouds that can alter the wind direction rapidly, potentially trapping firefighters, forest officials said yesterday.

The so-called Rim Fire grew to 134,000 acres by early yesterday morning, with smoke columns rising more than 30,000 feet, said U.S. Forest Service spokesman Dick Fleishman.

"That's a real watch-out situation for our firefighters when they see that kind of activity, they know that the wind could actually move that fire right back on them," Fleishman said. "That's been happening every afternoon."

The fire was threatening power and water supplies to San Francisco, about 200 miles to the west, and scorched part of Yosemite, a park known for its waterfalls, giant sequoia groves and other scenic wonders.

Started on Aug. 17 in the Stanislaus National Forest, the fire remained largely unchecked with extreme terrain and increased wind hampering efforts at containment, Yosemite National Park spokesman Tom Medema said. Seven percent of the wildfire is now contained, he said.

US soldiers vacation in Hussein's palace

House party. Gomez admits his men were "purposefully obnoxious."

As the war in Iraq drifted along after the fall of Saddam Hussein in summer 2003, the troops were restless. In an effort to keep them occupied, generals took a lucky few for some moments of luxury in one of the former dictator's opulent palaces. The party included Lt. Don Gomez, who is now publishing his adventures and told Metro about the trip.

Was it like spring break? Where there any rules?
We were restricted in that there were some no-go areas. It was a military building by then, and you could tell if somewhere was off-limits — but there was a lot to explore.

It must have been popular?
The group was about 15-20 U.S. soldiers, and it was full of everybody: Australian soldiers, international journalists, defense contractors, diplomats and lots of very attractive women. Some people stayed there for six months and rarely left.

Did everybody play nice?
It was like a high school mentality. Our morale had been low and then we had good food, air conditioning and a pool. Some of us were purposefully obnoxious, splashing around, and I think some of the Australians got annoyed.

Were you all getting good souvenirs?
Not at this point; it was a base that had been captured and guarded since early in the war.

@lenadunham: Ironically, Avril Lavigne evokes a feeling in me that can only be described as punk.

Oh man, can you believe that Taylor Swift got played like that by Yeezy AGAIN at the VMAs last night? Just kidding, this is just a still from the film reel of that trauma that plays constantly in T-Swift's head. Girlfriend seriously can't let that one go. (Not sure if you guys know this, but Taylor Swift can hold a grudge. She's got a lot of feelings, OK?) Material grill

You know that thing that happens when white people get ahold of something that cooler black people are doing, thereby rendering it instantly lame? I'm pretty sure that Madonna has just done that thing to grills.

Because, uh yeah, Madge is wearing a grill now. Because, of course she is. Madonna refuses to accept the fact she is an old lady and, as such, should not be taking her fashion cues from the likes of Lil Jon (or Miley Cyrus, who hammered the first nail in the grill coffin).

The 55-year-old pop star showed up for the unveiling of her new fitness club in Rome with a big old mouth full of metal, in what could not be a more nakedly desperate attempt to remind us that she is still super relevant and hip to what all the kids are into. (I'm not entirely down with what all the kids are into myself, but I'm pretty sure it's not Madonna.)

Kardashian husband missing on suspected Krack binge

I sometimes wonder what you'd have to be smoking to marry into the pack of bedazzled harpies that is the Kardashians. Turns out, it's crack. You have to be smoking crack.

It's recently been revealed that Lamar Odom (aka Mr. Khloe) has been addicted to crack for years.

And now, according to TMZ, he's missing. The Kardashians fear that the basketball star (now better known as the guy who has to listen to the least famous Kardashian whine all day) is on a drug binge after Khloe threw him out of the house. I'm thinking that he's just binging on time away from Khloe.

Chris Brown makes more good decisions

Know who is killing it at life right now? Chris Brown.

That guy is like the poster child for good decision making and not crapping all over your own personal brand. Beat up your very famous girlfriend? Check. DUI? Check. Insane Twitter rants about every gripe that passes through your crazy head? Check. Insinuating that you have ties to a very violent gang by illegally graffiti-ing a building? Check!

Brown hit that last checkbox this past Thursday in Hawaii, when he took a break from drinking fruity cocktails to tag a wall with epitaphs like "F— police" alongside what is apparently a shout-out to the Bloods.

Brown signed his illegal street art with the words "Fruits Piru," which people who know more about the intricacies of urban gang life than myself speculate is a reference to the Fruit Town Piru gang, a subset of the scary-as-hell L.A. gang.

Because a smart thing to do when you're on probation, and a famous person, is to pledge your allegiance to one of the world's most notorious street gangs. Killing it!

Jennifer Aniston comedy "We're the Millers" again came in second, with $13.5 million.

"Mortal Instruments: City of Bones," based on a popular series of young adult novels, took the No. 3 slot, ringing up $9.3 million. The film stars Lily Collins as a teen girl who tries to protect the world from demons.

Kicks to kick cancer

ASICS is debuting a line of sneakers Sept. 1 that will raise money for Childhood Cancer Awareness Month. Two dollars from each specially marked pair of shoes, like the GEL-Noosa Tri 8 ($130), will be donated to Cookies for Kids' Cancer, a nonprofit that inspires people to host bake sales and other events to raise money for pediatric cancer patients and their families.

From summer to September: Keep your vacation vibes going

You know that blissful mood you fall into each time the weather gets warm? It doesn't have to disappear after Labor Day. ROMINA McGUINNESS

Step 1

Move more

"Our bodies are designed to move, so move every day. It doesn't have to be strenuous," James Duigan, trainer to model Rosie Huntington-Whiteley and co-founder of Bodyism clinic, tells Metro. Go for a walk or do some squats before lunch. "Don't just think about exercising as a way to look better," he says. "Embrace it as part of your life."

Step 2

Become aware of whatever it is you're feeling

"If you're feeling anxious, try and bring your awareness back to your physical senses," says Andy Puddicombe, co-founder of Headspace, an online resource for meditation techniques. "Observe your posture, notice any tensions or sensations in the body, any smells or sounds, and sensations of heat or cold. Mindfulness isn't about emptying the mind, or suppressing uncomfortable emotions, but learning to witness these thoughts and feelings, free from distraction and judgement. Acknowledge them and they'll gradually begin to unwind," he explains.

Step 3

Divvy up your meals and lay off the alcohol

Duigan recommends eating five healthy meals a day, two of which should be smaller snacks. "Snacking ensures you don't overeat and will also help speed up your metabolism. Swap sugary treats and low-fat foods (often packed with hidden sugar) for foods like raw nuts, turkey slices, berries, vegetables or pea protein shakes (try Bodyism's Protein Excellence), he explains. And stay away from alcohol. "It will make you feel sluggish, bloated and reduce your body's ability to burn fat," he warns.

Step 4

Spend a few minutes meditating

"There are 1,440 minutes in one day: Take 10 to meditate and you'll feel less stressed, less tired and less anxious," says Puddicombe. "A healthy mind is the lens to a healthy life," he tells Metro. Meditation only works if you actually keep to it, so try and establish a regular practice that fits into your daily routine.

Watch your back at work

Advice from chiropractor Dr. Louis Peterson can help you avoid pain from long hours at the office.

JULIA FURLAN

Put your computer screen at eye-level

Peterson says that the first step to feeling better when you're looking at a screen all day is to make sure that screen is in the right place. "The monitor should be eye-level and looking straight ahead, not down," Peterson says. "And your keyboard and the mouse should both be close to your body." Have your elbows create a 90-degree angle.

Move it

Nobody has time to have a dance party in the middle of the day, but Peterson says moving around is a great way to give your fingers, eyes and spine a rest. "Most habits are formed unconsciously," Peterson says, so getting up out of your chair every 45 minutes or so is a good start. "You don't have to do anything special," he says, "just go stretch your legs, get some water, reach your hands up to the sky. It's like resetting yourself."

Sit right

Getting used to sitting properly is a huge step in the right direction, Peterson says. "When you're seated, your feet should be on the floor — not crossing your legs or tucking them under the chair, and not cross-legged on the chair." No matter how much better it looks, crossing your legs brings more weight to one side of your body than the other, which is a no-no according to Peterson.

Taxpayers happy to foot the bill for Manning

I'm sure I can't even come close to the pain and suffering Bradley Manning has endured, and I'm not about to try and condemn his choice(s). I only lend my support that his dream to be what he's always wanted to be comes true. We all know what dreams are and what they're made of. How can any of us wish to take that away from any human being who just wants to fit into society with purpose and fulfillment?

Some say taxpayers shouldn't have to foot the bill for his hormone therapy. What about the taxpayers who are more than willing to help support this guy's desire and need? I would definitely contribute to a legitimate fund to help finance Chelsea's quest. I think a lot of other nonconformists would be willing to do the same.

VINCENT M. CREAR, VIA EMAIL

A most unique grammatical blunder

Re: 'One Bourbon, One Scotch, One Beer' (Metro, Aug. 22-25) While I enjoy Mr. O'Neil's columns, generally, I must take exception to his use of the word "unique." In the first two sentences of Mr. O'Neil's column, he describes the Coolidige Corner neighborhood as "more unique" and "so unique." "Unique" refers to a single, sole, solitary item, of which there is only one in the world. In other words, there are no degrees of uniqueness. Something is either unique or it is not. I know, I know, the dream of well-written newspaper content is as dead as the dodo. But bumping up editorial standards isn't really that hard, and it would be beneficial to your readers.

Patriots 2013 position preview: Linebackers

NFL. The Pats' once young linebacking corps has matured into a formidable unit.

Brandon Spikes, right, brings the wood to Seattle tight end Zach Miller last season. / GETTY IMAGES

The Patriots' defense has long lagged behind the offense in terms of NFL stature. That could finally change in 2013.

The defensive line has shown to be strong up front through three preseason games, but it's the Patriots' linebacking corps that may be the bones of this year's success on the defensive side of things.

The crew is led by Jerod Mayo on the weak side. Mayo, a captain on the team, has become one of the better linebackers in the NFL and is a proven leader for the Pats. He's been a mainstay on the field since he was drafted 10th overall by the Patriots in the 2008 draft out of Tennessee.

What Mayo brings, aside from his great tackling ability, is his nose for where to be on the field. That's due to his work ethic on and off of it. He's amassed 100 tackles in four of his five seasons — and came up just short in 2011 with 95 tackles.

He's joined by middle linebacker Brandon Spikes. Spikes is a wild card. When the Patriots drafted him 62nd overall in the 2010 draft, there were high expectations on what he could add to the team. The results have been mixed. Spikes has certainly come up big on a number of run-stuffing plays, and has shown the ability to crush players on occasion. But it's the consistency that's been lacking.

Spikes is due to hit the free agent market after this season, so look for him to have his best season yet.

Last year, the Pats drafted Dont'a Hightower with the 25th overall pick. The then-rookie made a nice impact as the strong side linebacker, finishing the year with 60 tackles and four sacks. There's no reason to believe those numbers won't continue to grow in his second season.

Dane Fletcher, who missed all of last season with a torn ACL, will definitely see his numbers grow. Fletcher had put together a surprisingly good rookie year before his second season was stopped before it began, and it appears he's picked up right where he left off. He will sub in for Spikes, who isn't a three-down linebacker just yet, and also help out on special teams.

Jamie Collins was the Pats' first pick this year at No. 52 overall. He's shown a bit of viciousness that the Pats would certainly like to see, but still has plenty to learn in coverage situations.

Red Sox

Timetable on Remy's return to NESN up in the air

NESN finds itself in a peculiar predicament these days, unsure of when (if it all) is an appropriate time to bring back Jerry Remy as its lead analyst for Red Sox games.

Remy has been absent from Sox broadcasts since Aug. 16, the day it was learned that Remy's son, Jared, had been charged with the murder of Jennifer Martel.

The Boston Globe originally reported that Remy would be out through Aug. 25 but over the weekend NESN said that Remy would remain out through this week's series at Fenway Park against Baltimore. NESN spokesman Gary Roy told the Globe that he had no information on whether or not Remy would return to the broadcast booth this season.
